The trial of Chan, Reticker, indicted three years ago by a Grand Jury in Scott County for complicity in the escape of Ben. Osborn, then in jail under an indictment for murder, is now in progress here for the third time. The two previous juries failed to agree upon a verdict. Mrs. Osborn, the wife of the escaped prisoner, a beautiful young woman, is the principal witness against the defendent. The principal witness for the defense is Jas. Tucker, who was confined with Osborn, and made his escape at the same time. His evidence contradicts that of Mrs. Osborn in many particulars, and is explicit to the effect that the implements with which the delivery Osborn, then in jail under an indictment fo the implements with which the delivery was effected were furnished by a negro man, at one time a slave in the Osborn family, and at all times a favorite with his young master. The Commonwealth closed its tes timony yesterday. The jury after having been out only about five minutes agreed upon acquittal. A Feature of Greek Art.

A glance at the casts of any of the specimens of Greek art which have come down to us, shows the hair brought low on the to us, shows the hair prought low on the forchead. This was a classic notion of youth and beauty, and was applied in all statues of Greek divinities. The same idea is now popular among young women in the fashion of clipping the front hair and letting it fall over the forehead. The fashion is necessary in most cases, because of the want of a full growth of hair. The ordinary dressings fail to reach the sources of the hair and aid its growth. Carboline, an extract of petroleum, without the slightest offensive smell, a gentle stimulus to the scalp, which it softens and cleanses of dandruff, does reach these and effect ively assists nature in producing thick, soft, lustrous locks. Petroleum, as an illuminator and lubricator, is known wherever the foot of civilization treads; and now it is fast becoming quite as well known as a remedial agent. Purified into Carboline, it has proved a perfect curative of diseased hair. Let the lady, provoked at her thin and faded locks, try Carboline; let the man, annoyed day and night with a dry and itch-ing scalp, covered with dandruff, and hair that is neither a covering or an ornament, try Carboline; let the girl who "bangs" and "puffs" and "frizzles" in an endeavor to make the most of a scanty suit of hair, try Carboline, and one and all will consent to
